

Who knows what the next big idea will be.

Protecting Innovation in the New Economy

In today's information and service-based economy, American innovation leads the world.

But the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office wants to deny patents for business-related processes and methods — eliminating an entire class of breakthrough ideas from patent eligibility.

Congress and the courts have repeatedly affirmed that the patent system should protect all forms of human, practical ingenuity — including business processes.

Our new economy is driven by new ideas — and no one can predict what the next big idea will be. To remain competitive in the global economy, we need an open and neutral patent system that protects innovation.
